Well Known Man Dies At Salinas

Harry Hamden, the colored minstrel, who was in Redwood City with his troupe of colored actors, is dead. He was popular here and in many other places. He was a tall, slim man, with a good natured, care-free smile. He was a good actor and a good singer. He was in Redwood City for a few days and was very popular. He was in the city of Salinas, California, where he died.

Hamden was in evidence at the Fourth of July celebration in Redwood City in 1925. This was a big event of that period. He was in charge of the "Minstrel Show" and was very popular. He was in the city of Salinas, California, where he died.

Bride-to-be is Given Shower

Miss Agnes Hundenadt, who is very shortly to become the bride of Wesley Locker, was tendered a surprise shower on Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Emil Berntsen by Mrs. Berntsen and Mrs. L. E. Doolittle. The bride-to-be was greeted upon entering the house by the wedding march from Lohengrin played upon the piano, and by her little niece, Amelia Petersen, who dressed as a bride. She was drawing a pretty decorated basket in which were gifts from her many friends. Dainty refreshments were later served by the hostesses at a table appropriately decorated for the occasion.

CITY BRIEFS

Thornton Smith, connected with the construction department of the P. G. & E. Co., had the misfortune to sprain his right ankle when he stepped into a hole while he was being drilled for an electric tower. The accident occurred on Tuesday. He is now able to walk with crutches, after being confined to his bed for three days.

Among those attending the big game in the south today are Bert Mansfield and Dan Flynn who left yesterday morning and Joe Fitzpatrick, who left for the south last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hinton entertained Mr. and Mrs. Elgin Kreiss, Mr. and Mrs. D. Prichard and children, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Genocchio and Mrs. C. Greenwood on Thanksgiving.

Many are Made Citizens Here

Naturalization Examiner Paul Armstrong examined 72 applicants for citizenship Tuesday, of whom 59 were successful in passing. Judge John L. Hudson of Hollister, presided in the court of Judge George H. Buck. Of the successful candidates, by far the larger number were citizens of Italy.

The next largest representation was from England with 9 representatives in the class. As has been their custom in the past, the Woman's Relief Corps were present and presented a short patriotic service, featured by Mrs. A. S. Kelenborn, Mrs. A. Kincaid was chairman of the Corps. Each new citizen was presented with a small American flag as he left the court room by the ladies of the Relief Corps.

Mrs. Cooper First to Take Office in 44 years

On the first of this year, Mrs. Grace Lawrence Cooper will assume office of the county treasurer's office, a position held by her for the past forty-four years by P. P. Chamberlain, who goes into retirement after his long service to the people. He will carry into that retirement the best wishes of the people of San Mateo county, and the hope that his declining years will be peaceful and happy, amid the scenes of his early triumphs and with the people who love and admire him.

Mr. Chamberlain gave his youthful years to his country when it was imperiled by the civil war and the later of his life to the service of the people of San Mateo county, whose confidence and love he has always enjoyed.

Mrs. Cooper who takes the reins of office so long held by the retiring treasurer, comes from a pioneer family of San Mateo county, the members of which are identified with its development and early history. She is no stranger to the office or its duties having been the deputy county treasurer for the past three years. She is a talented woman who is fully capable to carry on the work of the important position and keeping aloft the high standard of efficiency set by Mr. Chamberlain.

Mrs. Cooper is a native daughter of Millbrae but spent her childhood in San Mateo. Since her marriage to Mr. Cooper some years ago she has resided in Redwood City.

Her father, the late W. H. Lawrence, came to San Mateo county in 1864, when he took charge of the construction of the Pajaro lake for the Spring Valley Water Company, later going to San Andreas lake to perform a similar duty. Some time after he moved to San Mateo, where he erected a beautiful home on the property, where the Lawrence school now stands.

Mr. Lawrence early identified himself with the republi can in the county. He was its first organizer and its leader for many years and in fact up until the time of his death in 1888. In 1879 he was elected a supervisor and became chairman of that body, a position he held for many years. When he passed away in 1888 his brother, James Lawrence, was appointed to fill the vacancy. Some time later he resigned and W. B. Lawrence, son of W. H. Lawrence, was appointed, filling two terms.

Father and son were both active in political affairs of the county. The Spring Valley Water Company owes much to these men for foresight and ability in managing the business of the company during the pioneer stages in securing water rights, buying water sheds, lands and the construction of reservoirs for the storage of water supplied to San Francisco. Both men acted as superintendent of the company in the county during their respective careers and both showed efficiency, honesty and ability in their great task.

It is fitting that a member of that noted family should be continued in the political activities of San Mateo county. Mrs. Cooper is a "chip of the old block" and has the ability, efficiency and vision that was so pronounced in the lives of her father and brother, and so possessed by her will be brought into full fruition in the treasurer's office. Mrs. Cooper will shortly announce her assistant to aid her in the rapidly increasing work of the office. She is capable for the task and we predict for Mrs. Cooper that the treasurer's office of San Mateo county will be the most successfully conducted of any in the state.

She is one of the best known and best liked women of the peninsula as the vote at the last general election will show she having secured a majority of nearly 2200 votes over her opponent, who was also popular and capable.

With Mrs. Cooper at the helm, the taxpayer may feel that their money is in safe hands and it will be distributed properly and fully accounted for when ever desired.

RAINFALL FOR SEASON TOTALS 7.42 INCHES

The rainfall of the past two weeks has brought the season's precipitation to 7.42 inches, the highest record at this time of the year in many seasons. The rainfall for the past week is 2.80 inches. The precipitation by days has been as follows:

Nov. 25 .77
Nov. 26 .70
Nov. 27 .74
Nov. 28 .20
Nov. 29 .03
Dec. 2 .13
Dec. 3 .13

The recent storm has caused the Spring Valley Lakes to rise considerably. The superintendent says there is more water in the lakes now than since 1911. A steady stream is flowing into them. There will be no scarcity of water this season. The rain fall for November has been greater in any time since 1884. This copious rain has caused everyone to be happy. Farmers are looking forward to a bumper crop and real estate men are looking for a heavy harvest next spring in the sale of real estate on the peninsula, the most wonderful place on earth.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED
The announcement was made this week of the engagement of Guy L. Fonda, well-known resident of this city and Miss Margaret Sherwood of Oakland. The wedding will take place about the middle of this month.

Miss Mary Frey of Pescadero will be accompanied by stereoptican slides.

After a trip of three months through Canada and the eastern part of the United States, Henry McGarvey has returned to his home on the highway. He reports having had a pleasant trip.

Robert J. Letts, the local realty operator, was called to the bedside of his brother, C. C. Letts of Palo Alto, yesterday, who is quite ill at his home there. Mr. Letts underwent an operation last spring from which he has not recovered. There is very little hope of his recovery. The summons may come at any time. Mr. Letts was active in the affairs of the College town for a number of years.

Mr. and Mrs. Crowell and Miss Alice Crowe had as their guests over the Thanksgiving week end, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Brizard of Burlingame, Mrs. Belle Wentworth Leach of Berkeley, and Mrs. Marjann Brown of Berkeley. Mrs. Brizard and Mrs. Wentworth, being sisters of Mrs. Crowell and Miss Crowe, are well known in this city. Mrs. Brown, formerly Miss Marjann Kirkpatrick, was a resident of city for many years, her father was and is well known in the city. Mrs. Brown is a great number of residents of Redwood City.

Miss Mary Frey of Pescadero will be accompanied by stereoptican slides.

Miss Mary Frey of Pescadero will be accompanied by stereoptican slides.

When the hearse in which they were returning from Pescadero plunged over an embankment of the Pescadero-La Honda road and rolled to the bottom of the bank, W. A. Crowell and William Hansen of this city narrowly escaped serious injury. When the hearse left the road, Hansen jumped, and managed to free himself of the car before it turned over, but Crowell, who was driving, could not jump in time and was rolled over with the car.

In his ride down the bank, Crowell suffered a number of bad bruises, but was otherwise unhurt. The hearse was only slightly damaged by its wild ride. The two men were brought to town by a passing motorist.

REV. CURRIE ADDRESSES LOCAL EXCHANGE CLUB
The members of the Redwood City Exchange Club were entertained and stimulated to the service of their community by a talk by Rev. R. J. Currie, pastor of the Congregational church, at their meeting last Tuesday evening. Rev. Currie spoke of community betterment and on the necessity for a city planning for the future.

The chairman of Tuesday's meeting was J. E. Baughn, manager of the Redwood City Ice Delivery. A clever memory test was made by Leroy Kennedy, 12-year old son of Guy Kennedy. The test showed effort and training. The five-minute speakers were Dr. W. B. Langston and Stanley Nether-ton.

The club went on record as favoring a community chest for Redwood City and asked the cooperation of other civic bodies in making such a movement possible.

DR. L. A. REED TO ADDRESS SEVEN DAY ADVENTISTS
Two lectures will be given at the Seventh Day Adventist church on Washington and Webster street formerly the Episcopal church, by Dr. L. A. Reed. The subject of the first lecture will be "Astronomy and the Bible." The first will be given this evening. The lecture on the next Saturday. The lectures will be accompanied by stereoptican slides.

Queen Marie Meets Fellow Countryman at Gary

When Queen Marie visited the steel mills at Gary, Ind., the workers seemed rather indifferent to her presence until she called out: "Are there any Rumanians here?" Robert Arlet, a young crane operator, stepped forward and had a pleasant chat with her majesty, and the incident relieved the occasion of all its stiffness. Above the queen is seen talking with Arlet.

World's Largest Motor-Generator Locomotive

The world's largest motor-generator locomotive, a giant capable of hauling 200-car trains, and representing what engineers say is one of the outstanding achievements in electric traction history, has just been taken from the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company to the Pacific coast and delivered to the Great Northern railway for operation in mountain service over the Cascade mountain grade in the state of Washington. It will be used on all trains operating on the electrified division of the road, this involving one of the longest and steepest mountain grades in America. Having transformers and motor-generators included as part of its electric equipment, the locomotive utilizes high-voltage alternating current on the trolley to drive direct-current traction motors, thus providing the highest efficiency from the standpoint of electric transmission and motor drive.

Ax Has Replaced the Tomahawk

Indians who lived in the wild turkey regions of the United States might have used the tomahawk to chop off the birds' heads, but the Blackfeet tribe of the Glacier National park reservation never feasted on turkey until recent years when they took to farming. They now find the ax a handy weapon for the beheading of the "turk."

Prize Pig Brings Record Price

The highest price ever paid in the world for pork was paid to Henry Roninger, nineteen years old, of Pelican Rapids, Minn., when his prize-winning Duroc Jersey was sold at auction for $125 a pound, or a total of $427.50. The porker was awarded the grand championship at the Junior Live-Stock show held at South St. Paul.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

"That's gold in them thar hills," up in Trinity county, and if you don't believe it, just listen to the story of Fred Miller. Fred Miller, an old-time prospector, believed that there was plenty of gold in the old Ozard mine in Rich Gulch near Helena, so he offered three weeks ago, to buy the property. The owner wanted $100, but Miller argued him down to $50. The aged prospector had only $65 and he needed that extra $15 for provisions. Well, all that glistens isn't gold, but you can't always tell how much gold is in a mine by the glitter, according to Miller. In the last three weeks he's taken $1,200 out of the abandoned Ozard mine, or exactly 24 times his investment, according to advices from Helena. And he is said to be bringing out the yellow metal at the rate of from $40 to $50 a day.

Tulare countians have just had offered to them another interesting bit of evidence supporting the establishment of theory that mind and matter of every variety carried in the soil. In this instance the products are two books, just published by a well known publishing house, written by residents of the Three Rivers section, just below Sequoia National Park, dealing with the same fundamental—romance—yet handled in two distinctive manners. Major Frederick Burnham, of year-old frontiersman and holder of the British Distinguished Service medal, has recently described his 30 years as a plainsman and scout, a romantic subject which publishers had sought to obtain for a decade.

A fire prevention bill empowering the State Forester to establish districts of fire hazard throughout California and formulate special regulations governing them, will be introduced at the session of the Legislature this winter. It was announced by state forestry officials. The special districts, in which state authorities would be permitted to prohibit smoking and camping and adopt other restrictive regulations, could be created under the proposed legislation upon request of 50 per cent of the land owners in the affected territory. Similar bills have been submitted without success at the last two legislative sessions.

Turkey raisers in Tehama county are being furnished daily quotations on dressed turkeys delivered in San Francisco by a service arranged by the agricultural extension service co-operating with the farm bureau. These prices will be secured by the Federal State Market News service, a government agency. The service in Tehama county is the result of interest shown by growers in the turkey situation as advanced by the recent meeting in Willows. Tehama county prices are a few cents under San Francisco prices.

At a recent gathering of the Sonoma County Pioneers at Native Sons' Hall in Santa Rosa, Thanksgiving felicitations were extended by the members, whose ages totaled several thousand years. One of the speakers was John S. Taylor, who is 96 years old. He recounted the days of '49 and '50 when he worked in the mines of Nevada county. Taylor is the oldest member of the pioneer society. Joseph M. Talbot, who was born in Bennett valley, near Santa Rosa, was president of the day.

A definite objection to the movement of the Native Sons of the Golden West to have the body of General John A. Sutter brought from Lititz, Pennsylvania, and re-buried beside the historic Sutters' fort, which he erected in Sacramento in the early days, has been raised by the pioneer's grandson, Reginald R. Sutter, of San Francisco. "In my opinion," my grandfather does not need this fictitious honor," says Sutter in a letter received at Sacramento recently.

The old town well in Elk Creek, near Willows, with its old oaken bucket and chain, one of the last survivors of the old days of simple water supplies, is soon to be no more. It has been condemned by officials of the State Board of Health. The owner of the premises has been ordered to install a pump. The well has been in existence longer than Tehama county and has always been a favorite drinking place for thirsty travelers.

Since predatory animal control was instituted in Alameda county in August, 1924, 1,168 predatory animals have been killed within the county by state hunters, according to Earl V. Cress, State hunter, who supervises the work in five counties, including Alameda. Of the number killed, 900 were coyotes, and 268 bobcats. Nine bobcats and five coyotes were killed by state hunters in Alameda county during last October, Sands said.

James Harginal, Windsor rancher, has purchased forty-two acres of the Bruner ranch, three miles south of Windsor, and will start a large dairy. Californians are "putting the cart before the horse," in expenditures to combat illness, it was claimed by Dr. W. W. Cress, Sacramento city health officer. Taking Sacramento citizens as an example, Dr. Cress said that the average person spends $20 annually for medical care and treatment in illness, exclusive of patent medicines, and only 80 cents a year for disease prevention.

C. W. Forbes, manager of the Manteca telephone company, has been appointed a member of the county board of forestry to represent the Fifth supervisorial district.

Under the direction of the Native Sons and Native Daughters of the Golden West a monument paying homage to the Mother Orange Tree at Bidwell Bar, near Oroville, was dedicated November 27, during the week of the Orange and Olive Exposition in Oroville.

Twenty trucks with a capacity of 100 to 300 crates each are making three trips daily between Sacramento and Davis laden with lettuce consigned to bay and Los Angeles markets. It is the first long distance shipping of lettuce out of Yolo county ever reported.

The county health officer of Mendocino county has discovered at least thirty cases of smallpox among the Indian men and women and children. At the home of Mrs. Mary Bond on the old Santa Rosa road, near Petaluma, there is a lilac tree sixty years old in full blossom.

A new subdivision has been opened in the southern part of Yuba which consists of thirty acres, all platted in one-acre divisions, these to be used for factory sites.

Preliminary plans for a Yolo county flower show to be held in Woodland in the early spring were being arranged by Mrs. A. B. Welch, president of the Garden club.

Approximately $2,600 will be spent by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company in the extension work in the Livermore district. It was announced by John Robinson, Livermore agent for the company. New cables will be installed to accommodate additional telephone subscribers in the valley.

Erected in honor of the Argonauts of the days of '49, the Pioneer Memorial church, erected by the Congregationalists of Sacramento and vicinity, was dedicated at Sacramento recently. The church stands just across L street from the historic Sutter fort. Rev. Harley Gill, pastor of the church made the principal address.

The Bank of Italy has awarded a contract to build a $50,000 bank building at Long Beach. The structure will rise one story on a site 80x120 feet at the corner of Third street and American avenue. It will contain five store rooms in addition to banking quarters, and it will be built of brick with stucco and cast stone exterior.

K. K. Iwata, Brawley, recently shipped the first full carload of spinach of this season to Chicago. This firm will ship thirty cars more while the total shipments for Imperial valley will probably double that figure. Spinach has not been shipped during the last three seasons, though in former years was handled extensively.

The Yreka chamber of commerce has appointed a special committee to seek a conference with army officials at Presidio to inquire what will be necessary to make Yreka's airplane field an official army-plane landing field. Army planes cannot land except as designated. Presidio officials declare the Yreka field is without any air pockets and landing can readily be made from either side.

Officials of the Baptist church at Arbutus, have refused to accept the resignation of the pastor, Rev. Walter F. Grigg, who had announced his intention of removing to Red Bluff. Rev. Grigg was urged to remain in Arbutus with the promise that more modern methods would be adopted in church administration. As a first step in this direction, a fine radio set was ordered purchased.

Deaths exceeded birth in San Joaquin county for the first time in three years during the month of October, according to figures given out by the San Joaquin health district. During October there were only ninety-one births, compared with one hundred and sixteen deaths, exclusive of deaths at the state hospital. Births for the first ten months of the year totaled 1,362, compared with 1,436 for the same period.

Conditions in the Amador county jail at Jackson, are flayed in the report of the grand jury, which has been investigating the battle. The prisoners are declared to be without fresh air, while the beds and bedding are called unfit for human use. The release of two of the prisoners is demanded because their health is declared to have been undermined by the conditions under which they have been serving their sentences.

The Lodi Union high school judging team won one perpetual silver trophy cup offered by the California Jersey Breeders' Association and four silver medals in the recent dairy judging contest at Oakland and the Pacific Slope Dairy show. Ripon school won first place by fifteen points from Lodi with Santa Rosa twelve points ahead of Lodi. The scores were: Ripon, 1,220 points; Santa Rosa, 1,217; Lodi, 1,205.

Throwing additional light on the mystery fig trees which are located on the property of W. H. Seaver and L. Leroy King in Elm Court, Roseville, William Cassey, son of John Cassey, who bought the property in 1870 on which these fig trees are standing, drove up from Sacramento recently and informed King that the trees were from fourteen to sixteen years old when his father first bought the property. That makes the trees from ninety-six to 116 years old.

Floyd D. Young, Pomona, United States meteorologist and manager of the frost warning operations in the southern California citrus belt, has returned from San Francisco where he has been working during the summer with the Federal Weather Bureau and has again taken up his headquarters at Pomona. This winter he will have eight assistants in as many districts in directing forecasts of low temperatures.

With the year's business reported the best in the history of the plant, and with the end in sight of the $200,000 plant reconstruction and modernization program, the Western Harvester company, Stockton, successor to Holt and Best, is launched into its new increased production schedule. The shops of the old Holt plant have been rearranged, to provide for more efficiency in production. The first year's output of harvesters is practically double the peak production of the old Holt company. Seven hundred and fifty machines were turned out this year.

Roseville licked a lot of stamps in one month, according to receipts from stamp sales for the month of October, 1926, when $1,856.01 worth of stamps were sold through the Roseville post office. This is a gain of $655.99 over receipts of October last year, which were $1,170.02.

Henry W. Dority, for the past thirty years a member of the Veterans' Home at Napa, died after a long illness. He was past 80 years of age. Dority, who was a native of Maine, came to California in 1875 and for several years was a farmer in the San Joaquin valley.

Good Printing
THE kind of printing that pays dividends is the kind you should have. Pale, muddy, poorly printed matter is waste money. The quality of your business is often judged by the quality of your stationery—inferior printing gives an impression of cheapness that is hard to overcome, while good printing carries with it a desirable suggestion of quality.

We produce only Quality Printing. Whether you want an inexpensive handbill or a letterhead in color, if you order it from us you will be sure of getting good work. We have the equipment and the "know how" that enable us to get out really good printing—printing that is read by people with the good taste of their users. That is the only kind of printing that

LAUDS WEEKLY AS BEST FIELD OF ADVERTISER

"NO form of publicity costs so little in proportion to service performed as newspaper advertising."

"The weekly newspaper is entitled to a higher rate per thousand than the daily because its life is seven days instead of one, and because of the intimate character of its circulation."

These are two points made by A. C. Olmstead, city editor of the Aledo (Ill.) Times Record, who is convinced that the weekly home newspaper has outstanding advantages as an advertising medium.

"To reach as many readers by any other method costs more for postage or delivery alone than the entire cost of newspaper advertising," says Mr. Olmstead.

Mr. Olmstead does not believe the value of advertising in a weekly newspaper should be assayed on the basis of circulation alone. He says:

"Advertising in a weekly newspaper is part of an interesting news carrier that talks about familiar people, tells of local doings in the county, and retains its vitality and pulling power for seven days—until the next issue replaces it in the public eye."

"The advertiser buys good will as well as inches. Space plus prestige of the newspaper means greater value to the advertiser. Space without prestige means a handbill."

"Successful advertisers study advertising values. They know that the local weekly newspaper—if it is a real one in the test of community service—is read with confidence and interest in the home. Its readers know that they can depend on it for correct news service, entertaining features, and advertising information that relates to their needs."

Of the $720,000,000 worth of advertising carried by newspapers in 1925, it is significant, Mr. Olmstead points out, that two-thirds of this, a half billion dollars, went into local newspapers as against one third spent in national publications.

"Statistics of newspaper production show an average daily circulation of about 34 millions, and an average weekly circulation of approximately 44 millions. The total circulation of weekly newspapers in one week, is, therefore, greater than the total daily circulation in any one day," concludes Mr. Olmstead.

MORE ACTION NEEDED

THE people of Redwood City last April expressed by their vote their desire of seeing Broadway opened through Main street. Bonds were voted at that time to pay a part of the cost of the work and all preliminary arrangements were made.

What the people want now is some actual work, some action. This is an important improvement for a large section of the town, in fact, for every part of the town for that matter, as the improvement in one section always results in a benefit to the town as a whole.

Don't Forget Dollar Day?

SHOP IN REDWOOD CITY MONDAY and be surprised how much your dollar will buy. Monday, Dec. 6 will be DOLLAR DAY, and judging from the whole-hearted manner in which the merchants are going at it, it will be Dollar with a capital D. There are going to be bargains, lots of them. Groceries, Hardware, Drug Sundries, Wearing Apparel and Kiddies Clothes, Radios and Radio Parts, Auto Accessories, Millinery, Art and Floral Goods, Meats and Vegetables; anything and everything, the things we need to use everyday, and lots of desirable and attractive gifts for Xmas. Our own stores in Redwood City are better stores than a lot of us know. They are up-to-date, their stocks are complete, and their prices are right, and Monday they are going to show you that they appreciate your past patronage, and merit your future trade. It will be a day of great big Dollar Values and Bargains.

Then there will be gifts, too, for everybody. They are going to shower down, literally, right out of the sky, great flocks of them. If you don't believe it be on the streets about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and see for yourself. All of the business houses participating in Dollar Day are going to give gifts, a whole lot of them, and all you have to do to get one is to pick it up when it comes fluttering down in front of you. An airplane will fly over the city about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and drop them down, hundreds of them, thousands of them, so if Old Santa doesn't visit you Monday, it will be your own fault.

Come down town Monday and find out how much your dollar will buy. Look over the advertisements in this issue of The Times-Gazette and you will find many things you have been needing and wanting to get, at prices you can't afford to pass up. Here will be a lot of chances to do your Christmas shopping early and save money, too.

This will be Redwood City's first Dollar Day. It gives promise of being a big one and should not be the last. Dollar Day in many communities has become an institution. It stimulates business. It holds up interest in the local trading center. It offers the housewife many chances to save dimes and quarters and half dollars, and it brings the merchant in closer contact with the public. The spirit of co-operation in this first Dollar Day has been very fine and a complete representation of nearly every line from automobiles done is participating.

PESCADERO GIRL DIES AT MAYFIELD

Helen Woodhams, youngest daughter of Judge and Mrs. A. W. Woodhams, passed away Tuesday morning at Mayfield after a lingering illness. She was born and raised in Pescadero and attended the grammar school there and the Halfmoon Bay high school. Before her illness she held a responsible position in San Francisco. Besides her parents she is survived by two sisters, Aida and Cecile Woodhams. Funeral services were held Thursday at her home. Interment was in Mt. Hope cemetery. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the family.

The GIRL in the MIRROR

By ELIZABETH JORDAN

She went across the room to a small closet. Even in the strain of the movement she observed the extraordinary grace and swiftness of her movements. She was very slender, very lithe, and she moved like a flash of light.

"Fancy my being caught without a lemon!" she scoffed, as she returned with the fruit. "Your brain-work stops abruptly sometimes, doesn't it?"

She handed him the lemons with a little gesture expressing amusement, triumph and a dash of coquetry. Laurie's eyes glowed as he looked at her. For the second time, in her actual presence, a sharp thrill shot through him. Oh, if she were always like this—gay, happy, without that incredible, unbelievable background of tragedy and mystery! He turned his mind resolutely from the intruding thought. This hour at least was hers and his. It should be prolonged to the last moment.

What he longed for was to hear her talk, but that way, he knew, lay disaster to the little supper in swift-returning memory. If she began to talk, the forbidden topic, now dormant, would uncoil its hideous length and hiss. He must hold her attention to other things.

He plunged at random into chatter. For the first time he told her about Bangs, his chum, and about Epstein, their manager; about their play and their experiences in rehearsals and on the road. Being very young and slightly spoiled, he experienced some chagrin in the discovery that she seemed almost ignorant of the men and the plays. Worse yet, she seemed not even aware that she should have known who Bangs and Epstein were. She did not recall having heard the title of "The Black Pearl."

Above her head he saw the "Man Above" had broken out of the box-office records; she seemed unconscious that it had ever been written. Observing his artless surprise, she gravely explained. "I have been interested in other things," she reminded him.

The forbidden topic was stirring, stretching. To quiet it, Laurie leaped into the comedy scenes of "The Man Above." They delighted her. Her soft, delicious laughter moved him to follow her. This last effort followed the supper; and Laurie, now in his highest spirits, added to his effects by the use of a brilliant afghan, and by much raising and lowering of the light of the reading lamp.

He was a fine mimic. He became by turns the star, the leading lady, the comedian and the "heavy" of the play. It was only when he had stopped at a moment's rest, and Doris demanded a description of the leading lady's gown, now represented by the afghan, that his ingenuity failed.

"They're so beautiful that most people think I made them," he said, serenely. "But I didn't, really, so I can't give you any details, except that they're very close-fitting around the feet."

He was folding up the afghan as he spoke, and he stopped in the act, leaving one end dangling on the floor. From the street below the sound of a whistle came up to him, sharp and penetrating, repeating over and over the same musical phrase, the opening notes of the Fifth Symphony. At first he thought the notes were whistled by some casual passer by. Then, glancing at the girl's face, he knew better. The sharp, recurrent phrase was a signal.

He finished folding the afghan, and carefully replaced it on the divan from which he had borrowed it. As he did so, he prattled on. He had suddenly decided not to hear that signal. Doris, sitting transfixed and staring at him, slowly became convinced that he had not heard it.

He glanced at his watch. "A shocking hour!" he ejaculated. "Ten o'clock. If I go now, may I come back for breakfast?"

"You may not," she made an effort to speak lightly.

"To take you to luncheon, then, at one?"

"No, please."

He shook his head at her.

"This is not the atmosphere of hospitality I am used to, but I shall come anyway. I'll be here at one. In the meantime, I suddenly realize that we are not using all our opportunities. We must change that."

He looked around as he spoke, and, finding what he sought, picked it up. It was a small scarf, a narrow bit of Roman silk carrying a vivid stripe. He held this before her.

"Something may happen some day, and you may want me in a hurry," he said. "I have observed with regret that you have no telephone in this room, but we can get on without one. My mirror reflects your window, you know," he added a little self-consciously. "If you need me, hang up this scarf. Just drape it over this big window catch. If I ever see it, I'll come prancing across the square like a knight to your rescue."

"Thank you."

She gave him her hand and the enigmatic smile that always subtly but intensely annoyed him. There was something in that smile which he did not understand, but he suspected that it held an element of amused understanding. So might Doris, years hence, smile at her little son.

"She thinks I'm a read," Laurie reflected as he waited in the outer hall for the elevator. "I don't blame her. I've been a perfectly good read ever since I met her friend Bertie."

His thoughts, thus drawn to Shaw, dwelt on that ophidian personality. When the elevator arrived he was glad to recognize the familiar face of Sam. "Yass, sah," that youth affably explained, with a radiant exhibition of teeth, "it's Henry's night off, so I has to be on."

They were alone in the car. Laurie, lighting a cigarette, asked a casual question.

"There's a plump person in blue serge who hangs around here a good deal," he remarked, indifferently. "Does he live in the building?"

"The one wid eyes what sticks out?"

"That's the one."

"No, sah, dat party don't live yere. An' ef he don't stop hangin' 'round yere, somethin' gwine t' happen to dat man," he robustly asserted.

"What's he after?"

"I dunno. I only seen him twice. Las' time he was sneakin' fun de top do'. But I cert'y don't like dat man's looks!"

Nothing more was to be learned from Sam. Laurie thoughtfully walked out to the square. He had taken not more than a dozen steps when a voice, strange yet unpleasantly familiar, accosted him.

"Good evening, Mr. Devon," it said. Laurie turned sharply. Herbert Ransome Shaw was walking at his side, which was as it should be. It was to meet and talk with Herbert Ransome Shaw that he had so abruptly ended his call.

"Look here," he said at once, "I want a few words with you."

"Exactly," Shaw spoke with suave affability. "It is to have a few words that I am here."

"Where can we go?"

Shaw appeared to reflect.

"Do you mind coming to my rooms?" Laurie hesitated. "I live quite near, and my quarters, though plain, are comfortable."

Anger surged up in the young man beside him. There was something almost insulting as he uttered the harmless words, and in the reassuring yet doubtful intonation of his voice.

"Confound him!" Laurie told himself. "The hound is actually hinting that I'm afraid to go!" Aloud, he said brusquely, "All right."

"You have five minutes to spare? That's capital!"

Shaw was clearly both surprised and pleased. He strode forward with short steps, rapid yet poised, and Laurie adapted his longer stride to his companion's. He, too, was content. Now, at last, he reflected, he was through with mysteries, and was coming to a grip with something tangible.

The walk was not the brief excursion Herbert Ransome Shaw had promised. It was fifteen minutes before he stopped in front of a tall building, which looked like an out-of-date storehouse, and thrust a latchkey into a dingy door. The bolt was old and rusty. Shaw fumbled with it for half a minute before it yielded. Then it grudgingly slipped back, and Laurie followed his guide into a dark hall, which was cold and damp.

"They don't heat this building," the voice of Shaw came out of the darkness. He had closed the door and was standing by Laurie's side, fumbling in his pocket for something which proved to be a matchbox. "They don't light it, either," he explained, unnecessarily, as the blaze of his match made a momentary break in the gloom. "But it's quite comfortable in my room."

He added reassuringly, "I have an open fire here."

As he spoke he led the way down the long hall with his noiseless, gliding steps. Laurie, following close behind him, reflected that the place was exactly the sort the ophidian Shaw would choose for a lair, a long, black hole, ending in—what?

The match had gone out and he could see nothing. He kept close to his guide. He almost expected to hear the creature's scales rattle as it slid along. But snakes like warmth, and this place—Laurie shivered in the chill and dampness of it. The next instant Shaw pushed open a door and, standing back, waved his guest into a lighted room.

On first inspection it was a wholly reassuring room, originally intended for an office and now turned into a combination of office and living apartment. A big reading lamp with an amber shade, standing on a flat writing desk, made a pleasant point of illumination. Real legs, large and well-seasoned, burned with an agreeable crackle in the old-fashioned fireplace. Before this stood two easy chairs, comfortably shabby; and at the arm of one of them a small table held a decanter, glasses, a siphon and a box of cigars.

As he took in these familiar details, Devon's features unconsciously relaxed. He was very young, and rather cold, and the quick reaction from the emotions he had experienced in the outer hall was a relief. Also, Shaw's manner was as reassuring as his homely room. He dropped the visitor's coat and hat on a worn leather couch, which seemingly served him as a bed, and waved a hospitable hand toward an easy chair. Simultaneously he casually indicated a figure bending over a table on the opposite side of the room.

"My secretary," he murmured. The figure at the table rose and bowed, then sat down again and continued its apparent occupation of sorting squares of paper into a long, narrow box.

Laurie mentally classified the "secretary" as a big but meek blond person, who changed his collars and cuffs every Wednesday and Sunday, and took a long walk in the country on Sunday afternoons.

However, the fellow had pursuing eyes. Evidently his work did not need his whole attention, for his pale blue eyes kept returning to the guest. Once Laurie met them straight, and coolly stared them down. After this they pursued him more stealthily. He soon forgot them and their owner.

Despite Shaw's hospitable gestures, Laurie was still standing. He had chosen a place by the mantel, with one elbow resting upon it, and from this point of vantage his black eyes slowly swept the room, taking in now all its details—a typewriter, a letter file, a waste-paper basket that needed emptying, a man's worn bedroom slipper coily projecting from under the leather couch, a litter of newspapers.

It was all so reassuringly informal that he grinned to himself. Whatever hold this little worm had on Doris—Shaw had even ceased to be a snake at this point in Laurie's reflections—would be loosed after tonight; and then she could forget the episode that had troubled her, whatever it was.

At precisely this point in his meditations Laurie's eyes, having completed a tour of the room and returned to the fireplace, made two discoveries. The first was that the room had no windows. The second, and startling one, was that it contained Doris's photograph. The photograph stood on the mantel, in a heavy silver frame. It was a large print and a good one. The girl's eyes looked straight into his. Her wonderful upper lip was curved in the half-smile that was so familiar and so baffling.

"Well," the smile asked, "what do you think of it all, now that you are here? Still a bit confusing, isn't it? For you didn't expect to find me here, seemingly so much at home; did you?"

In the instant when his eyes had found the photograph Laurie had been about to light the inevitable cigarette. The discovery arrested his hand and held for an instant, motionless. Then, with fingers that trembled, he completed the interrupted action, threw the match into the fire, and with blind eyes stared down into the flames.

In that instant he dared not look at Shaw. He was shaken by an emotion that left him breathless and almost trembling. What was Doris's photograph doing in this man's room? In the momentary amazement and fury that overwhelmed him at the discovery he told himself that it would not have been much worse to find her real presence here.

All this had taken but a moment. Shaw, hospitably busy with his decanter and siphon, had used the interval to fill two glasses, and was now offering one to his guest.

"No, thanks," Laurie spoke with abrupt decision.

"No?" Shaw looked pained. Then he smiled a wide smile, and Laurie, seeing it and the man's pointed teeth, mentally changed him again from the worm to the serpent. He understood Shaw's mental process. The fellow thought he was afraid to drink the mixture. But what did it matter what the fellow thought?

"Perhaps, then, you will have a cigar and sit down comfortably for our chat?"

Shaw himself set the example by dropping into one of the easy chairs and lighting a perfect. His smooth brown head rested in what seemed an accustomed hollow of the chair back. His wide, thin lips were pursed in a sly, sly, sly smile. He stretched himself in the warmth of the fire, sleek, torpid and loathsome.

"Mr. Shaw."

"Yes."

Still standing, with his elbow braced against the mantel, the visitor tossed his cigarette into the fire and looked down into his host's projecting eyes. It appeared that Shaw roused himself with difficulty from the gorged comfort of the moment. There was a perceptible interval before he gave his guest his whole attention. Then he straightened in his chair, and the projecting eyes took on their velled but watchful look.

"Yes," he repeated, more briskly. In the brief interval Laurie had planned his little campaign. He would address this creature as man to man; for perhaps, after all, there was more of the man in him than he revealed.

"I am going to ask you to be frank with me."

"Yes?" Shaw let it go at that.

"When we met on the street it appeared that you were as anxious as I am for this interview. Will you tell me at once why you brought me here, and what you wish to say?"

"Willingly," Shaw flicked the ash off his cigar, and kept his eyes on its lighted end as he went on: "I brought you here because I want you out of the way."

"Why?"

"Because, my temperamental young friend, you are a nuisance. You are interfering with my plans. I can't be bothered with you."

The sudden spark that in the old days would have warmed Devon's friends of an impending outburst appeared now in his black eyes, but he kept his temper.

"Would you mind confiding these plans to me?" he suggested. "They would interest me, profoundly."

Shaw shook his brown head. "Oh, I couldn't do that," he said, with an indulgent smile. "But I have a proposition to make to you. Perhaps you will listen to it, instead."

"I'll listen to it," Laurie promised. "It is short and to the point. Give me your word that you will stop meddling in Miss Mayo's affairs, which are also my affairs," he added parenthetically, "and that you will never make an effort to see her again. As soon as I have given me this promise I will escort you to the front door and bid you an eternal farewell, with great pleasure."

"I'm looking forward to that pleasure, myself," confessed the visitor. "But before we throw ourselves into the delights of it, suppose you outline the other side of your proposition. I suppose it has another side."

Shaw frowned at his cigar. "It doesn't sound pretty," he confessed, with regret.

"Well," Shaw sighed, dropped the cigar into the tray at his elbow and set up to face the young man with an entire change of manner. "The rest of it," he said calmly, "is this. Unless you make that promise we can't have the farewell scene we are both looking forward to so eagerly."

Not Used to Refined Fires

In her country home a woman has a number of open fireplaces. One chilly day she asked her negro maid to make a fire in the drawing room, and entering a few minutes later she saw Hannah hopelessly contemplating the andirons and tongs. "Have you never made a fire before?" she asked, somewhat sharply.

"Well, ma'am, I ain't never made what 'yo call a refined fire—no, ma'am!" was the puzzled reply.

Beret and Earlap Type Smart; Paris Features Fabric Contrast

VERY considerate is it of our milliners this winter to make way for our fur collars by creating hats which have little or no brim. Of course with brims conspicuous by their absence, responsibility for the conveying of the style message devolves to a great extent upon the crowns of our hats.

There is the little hat shown first in this group; modishness is written all over it, yet it is mostly all crown save just a suggestion of a cunning little brim, forming an earlap effect at the back. This clever model is styled of arctic blue antelope felt, edged with ling touch to this charming model. Paris has become interested in suits of the youthful short-jacket type. Many are the fascinating interpretations which this newest mode promises. The fact that the short-jacketed costumes feature fabric contrasts adds to their novelty. Velvet or velveteen for the jacket, with kasha cloth, crepe or some other wool material for the skirt outlines one of the various developments of this recent style innovation.

Very swaggy types are of fine wool, repp or mixtures for the entire suit, collared, cuffed and pocketed with grograin ribbon of self tone. There is an ombre lacquered quill half encircling it.

By the way, the latest millinery sensation is the earlap hat. A fetching version of this new type is portrayed in the center of this picture. For this the designer draped and slashed and folded into place a cameo-brown felt hood, binding it with grograin ribbon of self shade, adding a gold buckle fastening.

In the stylish beret shown to the right at the top again is demonstrated the idea of hats trending mostly to cover these days. The beret, of which this is an arresting exponent, is proving immensely popular. This one spotted calfskin or some other equally as fashionable smooth fur. Sometimes the entire coatee is made of the smooth pelt, the cloth of the skirt being inset in the collar and cuffs.

Of tuxedo inspiration is the modish short-jacket suit in this picture. Beige kasha is employed for the skirt with the grackle blue velvet for the fifty coat.

A pleasing costume emanating from a leading Parisian atelier consists of a short Norfolk jacket of beige velvet worn over a like-colored crepe frock printed in tiny plaidings. Topping this outfit is a hat of stitched beige velveteen.

Very striking is an ensemble the skirt of which is black velvet. Over is of totem-orange felt with band effect of flat lizardite in tones of black and red. Further banding is accomplished with black grograin ribbon.

A band of felt arranged as a sash about the crown line of a soft draped felt hood describes the stunning shape to the left below.

Again the beret attains distinction in the model shown last in this group. The broad band of black belting ribbon together with two brushes of black burnt peacock impart the finish.

A New Indoor Sport

Leonard Merrick sponsors a new indoor sport. It is one that is not so much unknown as ignored by many people who would find it a great source of entertainment and pleasure, and it may be that an introduction of it as something new will capture the consciousness of those who do not yet enjoy it. The "new," or newly discovered indoor sport is reading aloud. And in support of it Leonard Merrick, famous for his charming stories of the Paris boulevards, tells us that he writes his stories particularly with a view to their being read aloud!

It was at a meeting of the New York Drama Repertory circle that Mr. Merrick told the world that he writes his stories to be read aloud; that he wants them to be read aloud, because he himself never knew how good they were until he heard them read aloud! It was at this meeting, too, that I learned how much some people get out of the indoor sport of reading aloud, and determined to pass this on as a suggestion to our women readers.

I spoke with a woman who lives in a small town in New York state. "When we are at home," she said, "our opportunities for entertainment, as for culture, are only those which we make for ourselves. Up to a short time ago our evenings at home presented quite a problem."

"And one day when I was in town attending a meeting of the Drama Repertory circle it occurred to me that we could have a reading circle right in our own home. We tried it, and ever since when we are at home in the evening we read aloud. I, who am fond of doing the work, read perhaps more than the others, but all at some time take turns. We have found it fascinating, and we no longer wonder nightly what are we going to do tonight. We have found entertainment, and we have, of course, benefited by the greater amount of reading which we are doing. We cover everything from whole novels to poetry and the magazines and even newspapers. One of my sons, who is a sculptor, frequently brings in his work, at which he continues throughout the evening, while we are taking turns at reading aloud!"

The idea is a gem for making your evening at home live, interesting and entertaining for your family. The better you read aloud, of course, the more entertaining it will be and the more enthusiastic the others will be about taking their part.

Something Within Ourselves

Two sisters sat at a table in the dining room of a summer resort hotel. The one, poor and shabby, was the guest for the day of her more prosperous sister, who was installed for the summer at the fashionable hostelry and was giving her sister a day of the pleasure that was hers for months.

And poor girl, she had need of the day. After a carefree girlhood spent in quest of a "good time" she had, in defiance of advice and admonition, married recklessly and was now being compelled to lie on the very hard bed she had made for herself.

She was living in one room, wearing the remnants of her girlhood wardrobe, not knowing, frequently, from where would come the next meal. Soon she would have a baby which she would have to leave in strange hands while she went out to earn a living.

Yet, when the music played in the brightly lit room, she hummed with it, gayly swaying with the sound, bringing the only cheer and good nature to the depressed party at the table.

For her sister, well married, with a good husband, had been irritated by a detail that occurred during the day. Everything had not gone exactly to her liking, that was all. But she was all wrought up over it, and her discontent had affected her husband so that both wore ill temper and sourness on their faces—while the music played and zealous waiters anticipated their every want.

There was the one sister, living nearly under a shadow, yet light-heartedly extracting out of that one day every bit of joy she could get for the brief respite it afforded her from her dreary existence. The other, one of fortune's favored children, was irritated and unhappy over a trivial incident that warranted not at all the least disturbance of her equanimity.

And this brought again to my mind the truth that there is nothing in the world that can really and permanently bring or give us happiness except something within ourselves.

It is the faculty to take things as they come, to minimize disappointments and trouble instead of magnifying them, to ignore petty irritations instead of making mountains out of such molehills that is the magic wand which can bring us happiness in plenty and content in spite of hardship or privation.

"Well, I'm getting used to it, though, mother," she replied.

When the Weather Man Plays Tricks

by Ray Walters.

Do you ever see such peculiar weather? And for this time of the year?

Thus we exclaim when weather man plays tricks in our midst. If he shows us too much rain, we call it abnormal. If he shows us too much sun, we call it abnormal. What, he de- scribes us, do we call normal?

Strange weather, like the average is a useful conception for statistical purposes—nothing more, according to Charles Fitzhugh Talman, United States weather bureau.

He says, periods in which the weather, rainfall, humidity, cloudiness, conform very closely to the average of a long record for the same time of year are so un- usual when they occur they de- stroy the average of the day.

As usual, Mr. Talman ob- serves the New York Times. The weather has been conducting them- selves with normal abnormality, he says, and the customary com- parisons and explanations have been made on the subject. But, we take this weather man's word for it, the situation reveals nothing out of the ordinary.

Paradox that exceptional weather at our latitudes is the rule rather than the exception is easily explained, he says, is the most characteristic of the at- mosphere. The conditions in the misnamed zone, and the fluctuations occur have a wide range on the scale of the so-called climatic "moods," which are the averages based on observations over a period of time.

Talman admits, however, that, in addition to normal weather, which is common, and moderately abnor- mal, which prevails most of the time, there is a third type of weather which departs so far from the average that even after the lapse of many years are remembered as being extraordinary.

were not only like peas but in the thickness of three fingers, and in some places as thick as fifteen fingers."

The fourteenth century appears to have been a period of extreme climatic conditions in Europe. During the cold winters of that century, according to O. Peterson, the Rhine, Danube, Po and other great rivers were frozen for weeks and months together, and in fifty-five of the succeeding summers serious floods occurred. In 1342 and 1374 the Rhine was so high at Cologne that boats passed over the city walls.

In some summers, however, severe droughts prevailed. The "hot summer of 1357" was talked of for centuries after.

One of the most memorable examples of "dry fog" that prevailed in both Europe and America during the summer of 1783. A well-known description of it is that given by Gilbert White in his "Natural History of Selborne." He writes:

"The summer of 1783 was an amazing and portentous one, and full of horrible phenomena; for, besides the alarming meteors and tremendous thunderstorms that afflicted and distressed the different counties of this kingdom, the peculiar haze, or smoky fog, that prevailed for many weeks in this island, and in every part of Europe, and even beyond its limits, was a most extraordinary appearance, un- like anything known within the memory of man. . . . The sun, at noon, looked as blank as a clouded moon, and shed a rust-colored fer- ruginous light on the ground and floors of rooms, but was particularly lurid and blood-colored at rising and setting."

One of Benjamin Franklin's sci- entific disquisitions relates to this event. He says:

"During several of the summer months of the year 1783, when the effects of the sun's rays to heat the earth in these northern regions should have been the greatest, there existed a constant fog over all Europe and a great part of North America. This fog was of a permanent nature; it was dry, and the rays of the sun seemed to have little effect toward dissipating it, as they easily do a moist fog arising from water. They were indeed rendered so faint in pass- ing through it that, when collected in the focus of a burning glass, they would scarcely kindle brown paper."

Some specimens of weather are anomalous merely on account of their extreme character, while in other cases the remarkable feature is the place or time of occurrence. Prob- ably the majority of atmospheric events that are popularly classified as "freak" weather are those that occur out of season, or in a region where they are rarely experienced. For ex- ample, the memorable cold wave that prevail-d in the United States in Feb- ruary, 1899, was of unprecedented severity, but the fact about it that seemed most extraordinary was that it spread so far south as to give the Gulf coast a taste of zero weather.

The terrific hot waves that occur in our Middle West in summer, often ac- companied by intense drought, are economic events of much importance, but they are appropriate to a con- tinental climate and are too common to attract more than transient notice.

Inversions of the seasons in the shape of warm spells in winter and cold spells in summer always arouse general interest and bring to the fore those two favorite standbys in the ex- planation of weather irregularities—sunspots and the Gulf stream—just as, in a former age, similar untimely occurrences inspired pious tracts and sermons concerning manifestations of the Divine will. The most fami- liar example is the abnormal weather of 1816—the so-called "year without a summer."

For generations magazine and news- paper writers have repeated a few hackneyed statements about this fa- mous year, and public interest has lately been revived in the subject, owing to the much-advertised opinion of a certain unofficial prophet that 1927 is to give us a repetition of its win- try conditions. The facts about the year are, however, still somewhat ob- scure. Regular weather records were kept at that period at not more than ten places in the entire country, and nobody has, strange to say, ever un- dertaken a thorough search of other contemporary sources of information, such as newspapers and diaries. The following description of the cold summer, as experienced by the writer, Chauncey Jerome (of clockmaking re- nown), at Plymouth, Conn., is typical of those commonly quoted, and, like most of the others, it was written many years after the event:

"The next summer was the cold one of 1816, which none of the old people will ever forget and which many of the young have heard a great deal about. There was ice and snow in every month of the year. I well re- member the 7th of June, while on my way to work, about a mile from home, dressed throughout with thick woolen clothes and an overcoat on my hands got so cold that I was obliged to lay down my tools and put on a pair of mittens which I had in my pocket. It snowed about an hour that day. On the 10th of June my wife brought in some clothes that had been spread on the ground the night before, which were frozen stiff as in winter. On the 4th of July I saw several men pitching quoits in the middle of the day with thick overcoats on, and the sun shining bright at the time. . . . Not half enough corn ripened that year to furnish seed for the next."

slaves, and in many instances were not freed. Slavery prevailed all over Africa at that time, and it was over the abuse became so rampant that France stepped forcibly into the country and restored civilized order.

Number Was a Dud
There was a sort of superstition among the soldiers of the American Expeditionary forces that the shell that was going to get a man had his number on it. Every shell, of course, was numbered. One day a six-inch German shell whizzed through the air and landed without exploding near Fowler's outfit. It was a "dud." Fowler examined it. The number on the shell was 4018, his own serial number.

Not All Slogans Have Passed Into History
Few things can be more seemingly haphazard than the vicissitudes of fortune which have befallen phrases and sentences, equally striking and equally arresting in themselves, writes the Earl of Oxford and Asquith in Mc- Call's Magazine. Some of them have perished without leaving so much as an echo behind, while others have been blazoned on the banners of mighty hosts or become the rallying cries of great causes or have passed into the common currency of man- kind—Burke's "thousands of swords leaping from their scabbards," the Hun- garian nobles' cry, "Moriaur pro rege nostro," Maria Theresa's bright "angel of death hovering over the stricken homes of a war-worn people," Lincoln's "government of the people, by the people, for the people," Italy's "Fara da se," Danton's "Oue non nom soit fieri que la France soit libre," Jefferson's "that government is best which governs least," and the elder Pitt's scornful rebuke to his ringing partner, Newcastle, is one of the greatest adventures in our an- nals—"fewer words, my lord, for your words have long lost all weight with me"—all these come from an anthol- ogy which will never be exhausted so long as men can breathe or eyes can see.

But there are words spoken or writ- ten equally worthy of remembrance, some of them almost wholly forgotten, others serving in a mutilated shape, which are among the most to be de- plored of the lost fragmentary treas- ures of history.

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor
Take Salts to Wash Kidneys if Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers
Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted au- thority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They be- come sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sour, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot in- jure and makes a delightful efferves- cent lithia-water drink.

Treaty Left Portion of Spain in France
Llivia, the geographical and political curiosity of Europe, is a tiny islet of land which belongs geographically to Spain, but, nevertheless, is entirely surrounded by French territory. The origin of this remarkable anomaly pro- vides a good story of the ways and methods of medieval diplomacy. It dates from the treaty of the Pyrenees, concluded between France and Spain in 1659—a treaty drawn up by dele- gates who possessed the most imper- fect knowledge of local geography.

So Llivia remains Spanish territory, a triangle of four square miles, with about 1,400 inhabitants. To reach Spain they must pass by a neutral road constructed to obviate customs and other difficulties. But, as with Andorra, the passage of various goods through Spanish and French territory affords an opportunity to vary the monotony of life there—and, incidentally, swell the local exchequer.—Lon- don Sketch.

Tea Manners in Japan

Drinking tea is one way the Ja- panese have of embodying the stuff of nature and making life interesting. The Japanese even have a "Holy Scripture of Tea," which directs ex- actly how tea shall be made so that "each leaf should fold like a mist ris- ing out of a ravine and be wet and soft like fine earth newly swept by rain." Centuries ago a Japanese named Rikyū founded the tea cult and wrote an elaborate code of tea etiq- uette that is unchanged to this day.—Tea and Coffee Journal.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church are preparing to give a Christmas tree to the children of the congregation a few days before the holiday. The good ladies are planning to make it an elaborate affair.

Merrill Purchases Dickey Property

Fire Commissioner Charles H. Merrill last week purchased the Dickey property at San Mateo for $30,000. Mr. Merrill plans to subdivide the holding at once. It is one of the best known properties on the peninsula being the former home of the late Mr. Dickey, who superintended the construction of the battleship Oregon that played such a valiant part in the naval battle at Santiago. Lawrence Helmer of Redwood City negotiated the sale.

Dispute Over Bridge Settled

The age-old controversy between the supervisor of this township and the supervisor from Palo Alto regarding the joint bridge across the San Francisco creek on Santa Cruz avenue below the J. H. Meyer estate has been mutually settled. The span in question is unsafe and has to be replaced with a new structure at once. The new bridge will be built on the site of the former bridge at the end of the Monahan road and close to the old adobe house that was wrecked some years ago. Twenty years ago Leland Stanford had this route changed and had a new road constructed and a span erected at its present location in all probability a portion of the present thoroughfare will be abandoned.

Visiting From Here From Seattle

Water In San Francisco Creek

For the first time this season a stream of water flowed in the San Francisco creek. Last year there was no water in the creek until a month later.

Leave For Trip Abroad

Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Moore of Menlo Park, and their niece, Miss Margaret Hay, left Wednesday for New York. They will sail later in the year for a Mediterranean cruise.

Miss Hay, who has passed the last two years here, is to be married in the spring to Gerard B. Shillaker of London. She was in Palo Alto yesterday saying goodbye to friends made during her stay here, among them the members of Chi Omega sorority at Stanford. Miss Hay was affiliated with the Stanford chapter of Chi Omega and it was at the home of a sorority sister, Miss Adelaide Kelly of Palo Alto, that her engagement was announced last August. While in New York she will visit Miss Kelly, who is now attending art school there. Robert S. Moore is the largest stockholder in the Dumbarton bridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton and their daughter, Grace Hamilton, are expected home this month from Europe. Miss Hamilton entered school in France, but decided not to remain.

Mrs. Weir and Daughter In Paris

Mrs. W. B. Weir and daughter, Eleanor, are now back in Paris after a tour of Switzerland, Italy, Belgium and Holland. They are to be home in February.

Decides To Hold Xmas Party

The Menlo Park Improvement

Association at its last meeting decided to hold its Christmas party, the date to be set later. The association went on record as favoring the appointment of one of its members to act with a member of the local chamber of commerce, as a committee to which solicitors for contributions are to be referred.

The regular meeting dates of the association were changed from the first and third Fridays of each month to the second and fourth Tuesdays, this change to take effect at once.

It was also decided to hold the second meeting of each month beginning January, at the Trinity Parish hall, at which meetings instructive films will be exhibited. Only members of the association and their immediate families are to be admitted to these meetings.

Whist Party This Evening

The whist party under the auspices of the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce will take place this evening in the auditorium of the grammar school. A big crowd is expected by the chamber. A fine fat turkey weighing 16 pounds will be given as a door prize. Several other equally as good prizes will be awarded the winner of the games. The proceeds of the party are to go towards a fund to provide a night of entertainment free at the New Menlo Park Theatre around the holiday season. The cause is a worthy one. Patronize it. The patrons and patronesses of the affair are: Mrs. Herbert Pfolschacker, Supervisor John MacBain, W. B. Weir, R. S. Moore, M. A. Harris, Clarence Walter, Mr. Condon, Mr. Miller, N. Glazier, Chas. McCracken and Andrew McSwatt.

To Make Their Home Here

Mr. and Mrs. Bloom of Long Beach have taken the Eugene Ref-tarrin chalet at Atherton and will make the peninsula their permanent home.

Leased Home On University Drive

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hamilton have leased the Taylor cottage on University drive for a year. They are prominent residents of Los Angeles.

"Clothes Make The Pirate"

This evening in the New Menlo Theatre Lion Enol will appear in "Clothes Make The Pirate." Tomorrow evening, "We Moderns" is to be featured by Colleen Moore with comedy and the usual serial. Monday and Tuesday evening.

MOVIES

'TYPICAL AMERICAN' IS A BLOOMIN' BRITISHER

THE most typical American on the screen is the most typical Englishman who ever set a foot on the western hemisphere. That's the incongruity in the case of Reginald Denny, the star of Universal's "Take It From Me," which is to be shown at the Sequoia Theatre. Denny, since he began to star in feature films, comes to Universal, has never played anything but an American role, and is acclaimed as the only successor to Wallace Reid, yet he is as thoroughly English as King George, or the London Times.

"Three Faces East" Will Be Shown

Wednesday and Thursday evening Patsy Ruth Miller will appear in "Rose of the World." Friday evening, December 10, Rod La Roque in "Red Dice."

Married At Home Of Parents

The marriage of Miss Lucy Fratts to John Machado of Menlo Park took place Saturday at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. Fratts of Mayfield. The Rev. Father John Cavanaugh officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Machado are passing their honeymoon in Sacramento but will live in Mayfield.

ST. JOSEPH'S SCHOOL TODAY

At 10 a. m. this morning a football game will be played at Menlo Park between Mt. Carmel and a team from St. Joseph's school. The Mt. Carmel boys are very confident of winning, and the team consists of Eddie Cullen, Jack O'Brien, Dick Morgan, Phil Sharkey, C. Veroni, V. Veroni, Arthur Lucier, S. Nicol, Charles Keyser, Fred Asmus and John Semeria, with Tony Castro, as yell leader.

ALLEGED BURGLAR HELD

Fortune Smiley, who was arrested by Chief of Police J. W. Cellar of Atherton when found in the home of Charles Haas of that city was held over to the Superior Court for trial. Smiley appeared for his preliminary in the court of Justice of the Peace Ray Griffin this week.

SILVER ANNIVERSARY OF LOCAL COUPLE OBSERVED

Mr. and Mrs. Miles Sharkey celebrated their silver wedding anniversary last Sunday. A reception was held at their home.

tion was held at their home, 104 Whipple avenue, and was followed by a banquet at the Carmel Men's Club rooms, at which there were fifty present.

A wedding march was played by Sharkey's orchestra, as Mr. and Mrs. Sharkey took their respective places at a beautifully decorated table, the guests followed. A huge wedding cake stood in the center of the table, with a bride and groom and a wedding ball.

The following was the program: Songs by Miss Grace Maurer of Oakland, Mrs. J. Pereira of San Jose and Mrs. Sharkey; a piano solo by Miss Spranzo Camous of San Francisco, Mrs. William Jones of Berkeley and Mrs. Morgan of Redwood City. Special dancing was done by Wilbur Stevens of Redwood City and Miss Grace Maurer of Oakland. A saxophone solo was rendered by Herb Schuler of San Francisco. Then dancing was enjoyed by all.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. William Jones and son, Mrs. R. Brown, of Berkeley, Miss Grace Maurer and Mrs. Styles of Oakland, Mr. and Mrs. Silva of Mission San Jose, Mr. and Mrs. J. Pereira and Mrs. A. Camous of San Jose.

From San Francisco were: Mr. Ray Haglen, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dugan, Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Olson, Rago Olson, Mr. and Mrs. Ralf Olson, Mrs. G. Brombridge, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mississippi and children, Mrs. J. Torrano and daughters, and Mr. Pizone.

From Redwood City were Mrs. and Mrs. William Schoelles, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hinton, Wilbur and Charlotte Stevens, Miss D. Dearborn, Father Kennedy and Father Ryan, Newell, Miles and Philip Sharkey.

Mr. and Mrs. Sharkey were extended congratulations by their guests wishing them 25 more years of happiness and good health.

The couple were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts.

TAX COLLECTOR ASKS CO-OPERATION OF CITIZENS

In order to save the rush and consequent loss of time which always accompanies tax time in the office of the tax collector, Tax Collector McSweeney has addressed the following suggestions to tax payers:

1. Owing to the enormous increase in work in the tax collector's office, and the small space available to handle the business, the suggestion is offered that the taxpayers who have not already received notice of their taxes, mail requests for same, and pay by mail.

2. Taxpayers should state carefully the Lot, Block and Subdivision in which the property taxed is located, which will aid the clerks in finding the bills.

Requests for tax bills by mail, should be accompanied by a self addressed stamped envelope, in which bills will be forwarded.

Tax payers should remit by check or money order (certified check preferred).

Tax Collector is not responsible for errors. All bills should be read carefully, the names checked, and the location by Lot, Block and Tract verified.

Monday, December 6th, is the last day for paying taxes. To avoid congestion pay now.

Address all communications to County Tax Collector, A. McSweeney, Redwood City, Cal.

FOR $1631 WAGES

Claiming that $1,631 was due him for planting, cultivating and harvesting a crop of tomatoes on the Sweeney ranch, Menlo Park, Y. Michioka filed suit for that amount in the Superior court at here this week. E. H. White and J. E. Shearer of White & Shearer are named defendants.

Michioka alleges he was to receive $45 an acre for his work in cultivating the 55-acre ranch. A sum of $3,981.10 was due him, the plaintiff alleges, but he only received $1,450 of that amount.

Spring Valley Water Company has applied to the Railroad Commission for authority to grant a right-of-way to Great Western Power Company of California for a pole line over lands of the water company in San Mateo county.

ONE HUNDRED EIGHTY-EIGHT EXAMINED

One hundred eighty-eight persons were examined at the Chest Clinics held in San Mateo county on November 3rd, 4th, and 5th, under the auspices of the San Mateo County Tuberculosis Association in co-operation with the California Tuberculosis Association. Prominent tuberculosis specialists made the examinations. The purpose of the clinics was to get in touch with as many undiagnosed cases of tuberculosis and as many contacts to active cases as possible, with the view of establishing control measures through instruction and in further observation by family physicians or clinics. One hundred and eleven of the persons examined had been in house contact with active cases of tuberculosis.

Of the 188 examined, 104 were children under the age of 13; 56 were adolescents between the ages of 13 and 18; 28 were adults.

Among the children, 4 were diagnosed as incipient cases, and 16 were referred for further examination in order that a definite diagnosis might be made, 58 were in need of special care and observation, and many of the others were referred for medical care for other defects. Fifteen of these children are in immediate need of preventorium care. In the adolescent age 2 were diagnosed as incipient cases, and 27 were referred for further diagnosis. Of the 28 adults examined, 3 were diagnosed as active cases; 4 were very suspicious cases and were referred for further study, and 5 were diagnosed as arrested cases of tuberculosis. The examining physicians also noticed ten cases of goitre among the persons examined.

Because of the large number of contact cases who came to the clinics for examination, the chest clinics in San Mateo county were considered very successful by the state field workers from the Bureau of Tuberculosis, who are in the county making arrangements with the local health nurses for these clinics to be held. Tuberculosis is a hereditary disease as is many preventable and curable children of tuberculosis are no more liable to contract the disease if located from the proper methods of instruction for their health than are children of healthy parents under similar conditions of thought, but is a far reaching disease which should be far reaching followed by the local nurses, for many of the persons would without observation proper precaution later the disease. It is important to note that of the 13 cases as active or arrested, 8 contacts.

Plans to Enlarge City Hall Inspected

Plans prepared by A. I. Coffey, local architect, for the enlargement of the city hall were inspected by that board of trustees Monday evening at a special session called for that purpose. The plans include larger quarters for the water and police departments, for the health and building departments and for quarters within the city hall for the city engineer, who is now located in the Lambert & Walter building.

The proposition of enlarging the city hall has twice recently been submitted to the voters as a bond issue, and has twice been defeated. It is felt, however, by the members of the board that the proposition is an important one, and that if properly understood by the people of Redwood City, that it would carry. An important part of the proposed enlargement is the providing of proper vault room for the preservation of records of the city engineer's office. These records are of great value to the city, but are housed in a frame building without proper fire protection.

PIONEER OF COUNTY CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

The 80th birthday of Mrs. M. L. Beebe of Halfmoon Bay was fittingly celebrated at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. C. A. Rosenbrook of 115-A Hampshire street, San Francisco, recently. There were gathered for the occasion 26 friends and relatives of Mrs. Beebe, including 5 granddaughters and 10 great granddaughters, her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Beebe of Halfmoon Bay and a daughter, Mrs. J. W. McNulty of McCloud.

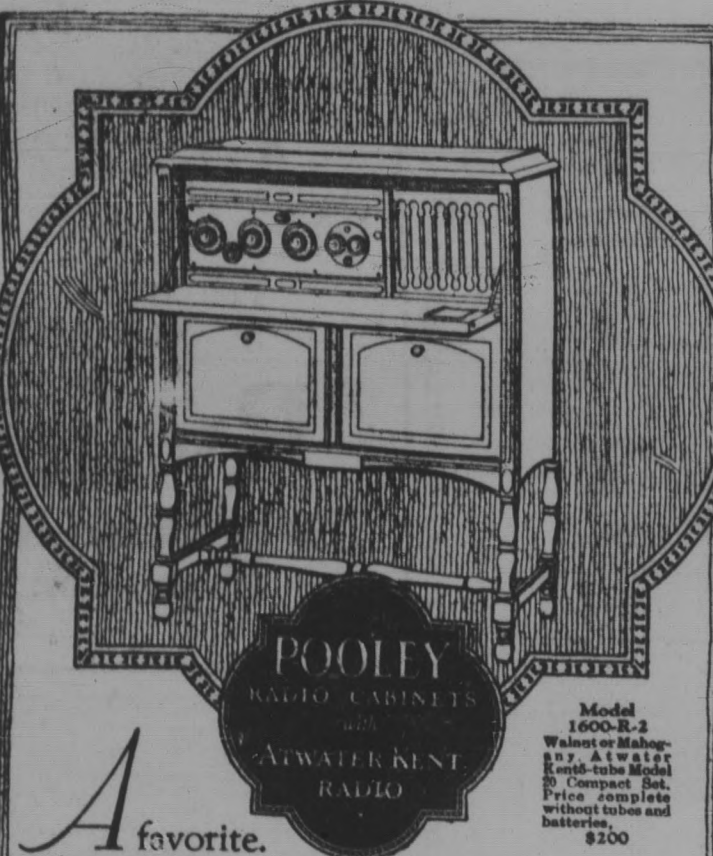

Mrs. Beebe is an old pioneer of this county, having come across the plains in an ox cart in 1859, and settled in the woods where the Native Sons now have their club house. Her mother and brothers took up 1500-acres of government land for a cattle ranch. This was known as Durham ridge and was between Irish ridge and the Davis ranch. She still lives on a part of this ranch with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Beebe, not far from the summer homes of J. B. Perry and H. C. Tuchsens.
